INTRODUCTION

This is a supplementary edition of Honours, Titles, Styles, and Precedence in New Zealand, which was first published in March 1977 (hereinafter referred to as the "1977 edition"). As a supplement it should be read in association with the 1977 edition.

The 1977 edition was corrected to 1 December 1976. This edition includes all those persons honoured between 1 December 1976 and 31 December 1979 inclusive. Also included are persons whose names were omitted from the 1977 edition or whose entry has been subsequently amended.

An obituary section records those persons whose names appeared in the 1977 edition but are now deceased.

Sections in the 1977 edition which have been revised are: Her Majesty The Queen; The Governor-General; the days on which the New Zealand Ensign is to be flown on Government Buildings; and list of abbreviations.

New information in this edition includes: a section on Honorary Awards; details of the Queen's Silver Jubilee Medal 1977; the Royal Humane Society of New Zealand; and the Office of the New Zealand Herald of Arms Extraordinary.

The Order of Precedence in New Zealand gives rise to considerable confusion and misunderstanding. To assist readers the Order has been reprinted together with an explanatory note.

In the foreword to the 1977 edition reference is made to Debrett's Correct Form (2nd revised edition 1976). I would recommend that this invaluable guide to social and professional etiquette, precedence, and protocol in the Commonwealth and the world be consulted for matters not covered by the 1977 edition and this supplementary edition of Honours, Titles, Styles, and Precedence in New Zealand.

As with most biographical reference works errors and omissions occur. The editor records his appreciation to the many holders of honours and others who have drawn his attention to inaccuracies.

EXPLANATORY NOTES

The following notes have been compiled by the Editor after consideration of past practice in New Zealand and current practice in the United Kingdom and Commonwealth (cf. Debrett's Correct Form). The notes do not form part of the Order of Precedence approved by The Queen on 9 January 1974.

In considering the Order of Precedence it is important to bear in mind that the table is a guide and that it is very difficult to strictly observe it.

The precedence of the Governor-General is absolute. The precedence of all others varies from time to time and from national to local levels, dependent on the nature of the occasion. Bearing in mind the relationship between the host and the guests the requirements of courtesy and hospitality usually override strict precedence.

The spouses of those accorded a precedence enjoy the same precedence as their husband or wife.

The precedence of The Sovereign while in New Zealand is absolute. Members of the Royal Family while in New Zealand are accorded precedence relative to that they enjoy in England.

Former office-holders, for which there is no specific precedence, are by courtesy accorded the precedence which they formally enjoyed or a relative precedence which by nature of the occasion is considered in keeping with their former status. The precedence of a former Governor-General is not absolute but he should be given the highest possible precedence bearing in mind the nature of the occasion and the relationship between the host and the guests.

Persons who have held several offices are normally accorded precedence relative to the highest office held.

Mayors and County Chairmen, while in their own city, town, or county normally take precedence over the Prime Minister in civic matters. Similarly, there are occasions where other office-holders, taking into consideration the nature of the occasion and relationship between the host and guests, take precedence over the Prime Minister.

Precedence within any group is usually determined on seniority (i.e., length of service, date of appointment). Persons of equal rank usually take precedence in alphabetical order.

THE ORDER OF THE GARTER

1977 edition, Page 44

The Viscount Cobham, K.G. died on 20 March 1977. Marshal of the Royal Air Force The Lord Elworthy, who was born, and now lives, in retirement in New Zealand was appointed a Knight Companion of the Order of the Garter on 23 April 1977.

THE ORDER OF THE COMPANIONS OF HONOUR

1977 edition, Page 48

On the occasion of The Queen's Silver Jubilee The Rt. Hon. R. D. Muldoon, M.P., Prime Minister, was appointed a Member of the Order of the Companions of Honour (C.H.) on 11 June 1977.

THE GEORGE MEDAL

1977 edition, Page 182

By an amending and consolidating Royal Warrant, dated 30 November 1977, The George Medal may be awarded posthumously.

The following medallist was omitted from the 1977 edition:

KENT, Sergeant Cyril George, R.N.Z.A.F., 1944.

THE QUEEN'S GALLANTRY MEDAL

1977 edition, Page 182

By an amending Royal Warrant, dated 30 November 1977, The Queen's Gallantry Medal may be awarded posthumously.

The following awards have been made:

HADLEY, David Alexander Jethro, 1977

HUGGARD, Inspector Melroy Kenneth, N.Z. Police, 1978

PENNIAL, Kenneth Trevor, 1977

THE QUEEN'S SILVER JUBILEE MEDAL 1977

In 1977 Her Majesty The Queen approved the institution, to commemorate the Twenty-fifth anniversary of Her Accession to the Throne, of a silver medal, known as "The Queen's Silver Jubilee Medal 1977".

The Medal was issued as a personal award from The Queen to members of the Crown Services and to others in the United Kingdom, New Zealand, and other Commonwealth countries. 1507 New Zealanders, including residents of the Cook Islands, Niue, and Tokelau, received the medal.

The Queen's Silver Jubilee Medal, struck by The Royal Mint, London, was designed by Mr David Wynne. Its description is as follows:

The Obverse shows a new version of the Crowned Effigy of The Sovereign, looking to the observer's right, surrounded by the inscription ELIZABETH II DEI GRATIA REGINA FID. DEF.

The Reverse bears the inscription THE 25TH YEAR OF THE REIGN OF QUEEN ELIZABETH II 6 FEBRUARY 1977 surmounted by the Crown and surrounded by a wreath of silver birch foliage and catkins.

The Medal is 32 mm in diameter and is fitted with a ring mount. It is worn suspended from a watered white ribbon 32 mm in width with a central stripe of cardinal red with garter blue stripe on either side.

There is a finishing edge of cardinal red at either side.

The Medal is classified as an official medal to be worn on all occasions on which decorations and medals are worn. Commercially manufactured medallions of whatever origin, which may have been on sale on the occasion of the Jubilee, should not be worn in such a way as might confuse them with the Official Medal.

THE ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY OF NEW ZEALAND

Office: P.O. Box 2335, Christchurch

The Royal Humane Society of New Zealand was founded in Christchurch on 14 October 1898 as "The Humane Society of New Zealand". It was granted the title "Royal" and adopted its present title on 30 December 1898.

The Governor-General is traditionally Patron of the Society which is administered by a Court of Directors consisting of a president, vice-president, and eight directors.

The objects of the Society are to bestow Awards upon all who promptly risk their lives to save those of their fellows.

For the purpose of carrying out the first of these objects, six classes of Awards have been founded, viz—

The Gold Medal.

The Silver Medal.

The Bronze Medal.

Certificate of Merit.

Letter of Commendation.

In Memoriam Certificate.

The following is an indication of cases recognisable by this Society for Awards—

All rescues or attempted rescues from drowning provided the rescues are accompanied by personal risk.

All cases of bravery in rescuing or attempting to rescue persons from asphyxia in mines, wells, blast furnaces, or in sewers where foul gas may endanger life, also in rescuing or attempting to rescue persons whose lives may be endangered by fire or any other cases of bravery directed towards the saving of lives.

Applications for Awards will not be recognised if made more than 12 months after the rescue or attempted rescue has been made unless the Court of Directors considers that there are special circumstances to justify an exception being made.

No award will be made in any case where there is near relationship of the rescuer to the rescued unless the Court of Directors considers that there are special circumstances to justify an exception being made.

All applications for awards are required to pass through the offices of the Local Authority (Town, County, or Borough Clerk) in whose area the rescues occur.

The Medals of the Society and ribbons denoting the same may be worn by both civilians and military personnel on all occasions on which official Orders, decorations, and medals are worn but on the right side of the coat.

HONORARY AWARDS

The Statutes and Royal Warrants of the various orders, decorations, and medals make provision for persons not being citizens of a Commonwealth country of which The Queen is Head of State to receive "Honorary" awards. There are no statutory limits on the number of honorary awards that may be granted and they are usually announced outside the regular (New Year and Queen's Birthday) Honours Lists. Honorary awards are not Gazetted.

In the case of honorary appointments to the first or second classes of orders of chivalry (i.e., knighthoods), the recipient does not receive the accolade or use the appellation "Sir" or, in the case of women, "Dame", e.g., the style of an Honorary Knight would be "Professor J. B. Condliffe, K.C.M.G."

Recipients of lesser honours may use the appropriate post-nominal letters but there is no indication of whether the award is "Honorary" or "Ordinary", e.g., "Professor P. T. Hoffmann, Q.S.O."

The following is a list of honorary awards conferred on the advice of Her Majesty's New Zealand Ministers. Where the country of residence of the recipient is not stated the person is permanently resident in New Zealand.

The Most Distinguished Order of St Michael and St George

CONDLIFFE, Emeritus Professor John Bell, U.S.A., Honorary K.C.M.G. (1977)

NEW ZEALAND HERALD OF ARMS EXTRAORDINARY TO HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN

On 6 February 1978, Waitangi Day and the 26th Anniversary of Her Majesty's accession to the Throne, The Queen was graciously pleased to approve the appointment of an Officer of Arms Extraordinary with the title of "New Zealand Herald of Arms".

This is a new heraldic office but the occupant was appointed in the traditional manner for Heralds Extraordinary, that is to say, upon the nomination of the Earl Marshal of England, by Royal Warrant. He ranks among Her Majesty's Officers of Arms and takes precedence in accordance with the usual custom in such matters and is a member of both the Royal Household and the Governor-General's Household.

The word "Extraordinary" in this context is used in contradiction of the phrase "In Ordinary" which signifies a full-time or permanent Officer of Arms. A Herald Extraordinary combines his duties with other responsibilities.

The first holder of the Office and title of New Zealand Herald of Arms is Phillippe Patrick O'Shea, Esquire, of Wellington, Advisory Officer for Honours, Cabinet Office, Prime Minister's Department. As an Officer of Arms, however, he acts, in accordance with custom, quite independently.

Armorial Bearings are in the nature of an honour from the Sovereign and they require proper control and protection to ensure that the dignity of the Crown is maintained. There are few countries in the world which do not have some form of control over official and other emblems.

Since the early 1900's the New Zealand Government had periodically consulted Garter Principal King of Arms and other Officers of Arms on heraldic matters. An informal liaison had therefore been long established at an official level with the College of Arms. It was only logical that during the 1973-74 review of the Royal Honours system in New Zealand that the College and Garter should be consulted on the Government's desire to reaffirm and clarify the Sovereign's prerogative as the "Fount of all Honour" in respect of the granting and confirmation of Armorial Bearings and certain allied matters in New Zealand.

For many years the absence of any formal reaffirmation of the Sovereign's prerogative tended to create a confused situation which resulted in the unauthorised use or misuse of Arms and other heraldic devices.

Her Majesty's lieutenants in exercising this undisputed Royal prerogative are the Earl Marshal and the Kings of Arms in England. With the appointment of a New Zealand Herald of Arms, New Zealand has formally recognised the Royal prerogative and the authority of the Earl Marshal and Kings of Arms.

The general heraldic duties of the New Zealand Herald of Arms is to act as the formal channel of communication, and liaison, between this country and Her Majesty's College of Arms. The duties fall into three categories:

Heraldic: To advise the Crown in Right of New Zealand, the Government, Government Departments, and the Armed Forces on heraldic and certain allied matters; to liaise with the College of Arms in respect of the Granting, confirmation, and registration of Arms, both personal and corporate, and to advise on technical aspects of distinctive New Zealand motifs which it is desired be incorporated in any Grant.

Ceremonial: To attend Her Majesty The Queen or His Excellency the Governor-General on such occasions as may from time to time be commanded by The Queen or the Governor-General.

Genealogical: To liaise with the College of Arms in matters relating to the research and registration of genealogies.

In matters relating to the badges, emblems, and flags of Government Departments and official agencies of the Government, the New Zealand Herald of Arms acts as New Zealand Deputy to Garter Principal King of Arms. As Deputy to Garter, he also acts as Deputy Inspector of army, naval, and air force Colours and Badges.

For advice or services rendered the New Zealand Herald of Arms charges fees which are payable to the "Public Account".

[The use of the New Zealand Coat of Arms remains the responsibility of the Minister and Department of Internal Affairs.]

The New Zealand Herald of Arms will be pleased to give advice on armorial and other heraldic problems.

P. P. O'Shea, Esq.,
New Zealand Herald of Arms,
c/- Executive Council Chambers,
Parliament Buildings,
Wellington.

RIGHT TO ARMORIAL BEARINGS

by

*Sir Anthony Wagner, K.C.B., K.C.V.O., D.LITT., Clarenceux King of Arms
(Garter Principal King of Arms, 1961-78)*

PROOF OF RIGHT TO ARMS

A right to arms can be established in two ways, by descent or by patent.

Right by descent is proved by establishing descent in the male line from an ancestor whose right to arms has already been recorded at the College of Arms. The first step will usually be a search in the College Records which may be followed by genealogical research and the proof and official registration of a pedigree.

The other method of establishing a right to arms is by a grant of arms by letters patent. The right to issue such letters patent of arms is delegated by the Crown to the Kings of Arms (by their letters patent of appointment under the Great Seal) with the proviso that a warrant from the Earl Marshal must first be obtained. The first step is, accordingly, the presentation of a petition to the Earl Marshal and this will be drafted for the petitioner by a herald if he is satisfied from the particulars given him that the petition is likely in the light of prevalent rules and practice to be accepted. Examples of qualifications cited at the present time are the receipt of awards or honours from the Crown, the attainment of senior rank in the Armed Forces or Public Service, University degrees, professional qualifications, the performance of public service, and eminence or good standing in national or local life.

Many corporate bodies such as Local and Statutory Authorities, Ecclesiastical, Educational and Charitable bodies, Professional and other Associations, and certain kinds of business corporation of suitable standing, have also been granted arms and in the twentieth century the proportion of corporate to personal grants has tended to increase.

If the Earl Marshal approves an application (and no reason will be given if his approval is withheld), he issues his warrant to the Kings of Arms and this is their authority for proceeding. At this stage the herald, who is acting for the petitioner, will consult with him about elements or references to be worked into the design of the arms. The effectiveness of a heraldic design is much enhanced by simplicity and it is therefore a mistake to try to include too much. The composition must accord with the rules of heraldry and must be distinctive from the many thousands already on record.

The fulfilment of all these requirements naturally calls for considerable research as well as knowledge and professional skill. The best results are usually secured, if the petitioner gives the herald his views in fairly general terms with some latitude for inclusion or omission. Suitable references will be to the grantee's personal or family associations, achievements or interests, geographical, professional or purely personal. Canting devices, also, punning obviously or cryptically on the name or associations of the owner of the arms, go back to the earliest days of heraldry. A design having been arrived at will be embodied in a 'sketch for approval', which will be sent to the petitioner for approval or comment. If he approves he will be asked to sign the design and return it, when the letters patent will be prepared. If, on the other hand, he has criticisms to make a further sketch or sketches may be made for him, the final decision resting with the Kings of Arms.

In scrutinizing a sketch for approval it is important to bear in mind that it is not a finished rendering but an indication or diagram and is sent for comment on points of substance, not on points of drawing. The form of arms, once granted, is governed not by a painting but by the words of the blazon or technical description given in the letters patent. So long as the herald painter or designer interprets the blazon correctly, according to the rules and practice of heraldry, he may, and indeed should, exercise artistic licence and render the arms in a way appropriate to the particular scale, type or circumstances of the use in question.

This controlled freedom of rendering plays a great part in the special character of heraldic design and explains why heraldry retains its character through the centuries, though the heraldry of every period is distinctive in style from that of every other. For the same reason the rendering of the arms in the letters patent is not a sealed pattern to be copied literally on all occasions without alteration. On the contrary arms must be rendered in different ways for different purposes, though this must, of course, be done with skill and knowledge, in compliance with the blazon and the rules of heraldry. For example a small scale rendering may, and usually should, omit fine lines and details which would be shown on a larger scale, though this must be done without omission of anything essential. The style of shield, helmet and mantling and indeed the manner of rendering charges can be varied greatly to produce different kinds of effect.

The rendering of arms on bookplates is a good example. If the design is to be engraved by hand on steel or copper by a skilled engraver, there is ample scope for an ambitious and minutely detailed design. If, on the other hand, the design is to be reproduced mechanically from a drawing, by a line block or similar process, the only way to make the result effective is by means of a bold and simple design expressly kept within the limitations of the medium. There is much to be said for having designs for different purposes made by the herald painter at the same time that he paints the patent. Another example is the use of arms on flags and banners. One sometimes sees a shield, with or without its crest, helmet and mantling, painted in the middle of a banner. The true heraldic practice, on the contrary, is to adapt the shield design to the banner form, save in the special cases of the standard and the badge flag, which have their own rules.

The component parts of a normal coat of arms are the shield, crest, helmet, mantling and motto. Their origin and nature is explained in all text books of heraldry. A maid or widow bears her arms on a lozenge and bears no crest. The form of the helmet (which depends on the rank of the bearer) and the mantling is governed by general heraldic rules and not by the individual grant. They are therefore not normally shown in a 'sketch for approval'. The omission of the helmet and mantling from the approval sketch sometimes leads to criticism of the proportion of the crest relatively to the shield. This is needless, for it may be taken for granted that the herald in producing his design will have the proportions of the final effect well in mind. On the other hand the shield or the crest singly may be used alone, without helmet and mantling, and this is appropriate where a small scale device is wanted, as on a signet ring.

The motto may be chosen more or less at will, may be in any language and need not be distinctive. The best advice, probably is to put a sentiment in the language which will best express it clearly and briefly. Some sentiments go best in Latin, others in English, Maori or some other language.

The Statutes of the Orders of Chivalry lay down ways in which their several insignia may be borne in the arms of the members of their different grades. Peers, Knights of the Garter, the Knights Grand Cross of the other Orders and the more important corporate bodies may be granted Supporters to their arms—a pair of figures standing on either side of the shield and supporting it, like the lion and unicorn in the Royal Arms or the Maori Chieftain and European Woman in the New Zealand Coat of Arms. These may be beasts, birds, monsters, human figures or even trees. The view is widely held, however, that beasts, birds and monsters make the most effective appearance. Each pair of Supporters must be distinctive as a pair from all other pairs.

Any grantee of arms may also be granted a heraldic badge. This is a device, not normally charged on a shield nor borne, like a crest, upon a torse, of a type used by great lords in the middle ages for display on their retainers' liveries and by lesser men for marking property. A familiar example of a badge is the Ostrich feathers of the Prince of Wales. Since a wife may not use her husband's crest nor an unmarried daughter her father's, but each may use his badge, the badge has special value for use by ladies. To corporate bodies with uniformed staff the badge has an obvious value for cap badges and the like. Similarly large organizations, which need different devices for headquarter and branch use, may differentiate in this way, while certain local authorities reserve their arms for strictly official use but permit the use of their badges for more general purposes.

The marshalling of arms is the combination of more than one coat of arms in a single achievement by means of impalement, quartering or like. The purpose is to indicate marriage—to a heraldic heiress or otherwise—representation in blood, the combination of different lordships or sovereignties in one hand and similar situations. Marshalling is governed by rules, which are explained at length in the text books. In this field, however, as in others there are exceptional situations for which heraldic practice has solutions not to be found in the text books.

THE ARMS OF CORPORATE BODIES

Eligibility for a Grant of Arms

The granting of arms to corporate bodies and the use of those arms when granted give rise to special questions, which are often asked. An attempt is here made to answer some of these.

The petition for a grant to such a body must set out how and when the body first acquired legal existence and the legal process of any subsequent change in its name or constitution, so as to connect the original foundation with the present day entity. The herald concerned in the case will draft the petition but can only do so when he has been given the full facts. The recital of these should, however, be confined to the essentials.

Bodies incorporated by or pursuant to, Act of Parliament or Royal Charter have been eligible for grants of arms from the fifteenth century or earlier. The eligibility of companies under the Companies Acts, however, has depended on their objects, activities and standing. The great banks, shipping companies and insurance companies were granted arms because they were held to provide services of national importance, whereas companies which simply produced or offered goods for sale were excluded. A rather different test is now applied. Two questions are asked. First: are the activities of the company of national value and importance? Second: is the place of the company eminent among those who pursue that activity? If the answer to both questions is affirmative, the company may be eligible. The Earl Marshal is, however, entrusted with an absolute discretion.

Policy and Procedure on Design

If consideration of designs for arms is entrusted to an entire council or large committee the result, as experience shows, is too often frustration. To say that the taste of a council is the lowest common measure of the taste of its members might be going too far, yet it is true that some such principle seems often to be at work. Perhaps this comes from the attempt to find a compromise in a realm where compromise is not appropriate. A still worse result, which sometimes flows from entrusting matters to too large a body is failure to agree at all. Fortunately this does not stop the proceedings since the final decision on design is made not by the grantee but by the Kings of Arms, though some Kings of Arms have been criticized for accepting poor heraldry in order to please grantees.

A corporate body will usually wish its arms to refer to its history, topography, activities and aspirations, or to some of these. The starting point for settling a design should therefore be to list in order of importance such associations and elements. This list for a local authority might refer to the name of the place and to associations with historical families and famous men, to geographical features and to local trades, industries and other activities. Such a list, if items and priorities were disputed, could well be the subject of a council vote. When it comes, however, to translating the approved list into heraldic terms either one man or at most two or three should be deputed to settle things with the heraldic authority.

When people not versed in heraldry are asked to comment on a sketch design for a coat of arms, they are quite naturally apt, unless warned, to comment on, what is at this point irrelevant, the drawing or rendering of the proposed coat. The thing in fact to be settled at this stage is simply the substance of the arms—which will eventually be defined by a blazon or form of words, not by a picture. It is a feature of heraldry essential to its vitality that an artist rendering a coat of arms, while he must follow the blazon of the coat and the general rules of heraldry, neither need nor should copy any previous rendering line by line. The painting of the arms on the letters patent is therefore in no sense a sealed pattern, to be copied literally on all future occasions.

It therefore follows that such comments on a sketch design as, 'I should prefer a fiercer looking lion and a brighter shade of red', are irrelevant to what has to be settled at this stage, which is simply what charges are to be included and their heraldic tinctures and relative positions merely up to the point to which the blazon will fix these.

It follows also that, when the arms have been settled, they must be specially designed and rendered for different uses. For example, if the arms are to be enamelled on a jewel of office, the herald painter must either be asked to design the jewel or must be given a drawing of its proposed form so that he may fit and proportion his rendering of the arms to the space it affords, while adapting the colouring and detail to the medium. In the same way a black and white drawing for reproduction by die or line block as a letterhead or the like will want quite different treatment from a fine line drawing for engraving on silver. So too with designs for three dimensional rendering, whether small scale on a corporate seal, or large scale on a carving in wood or stone.

Besides the shield and crest major corporations may also be granted supporters to the shield and a badge.

The view is sometimes put forward that shields only, and not crests, are appropriate to corporate bodies in general and academic bodies in particular. The reason usually given is that a corporate body has either no head on which to wear a helmet, or only a civilian one. This ignores the point that neither has it a warlike arm to support a shield. The very existence of a corporate body depends on the fiction which, for legal purposes, equates the legal person with a natural person.

Use and Display by the Grantee

A corporate body, even more than most individuals, will have a range of uses for its armorial ensigns of widely differing scale and importance. These different purposes can be served most effectively by a coherent plan based on these two factors relative size and relative importance. For the largest scale renderings the full achievement—Shield, Crest, helmet and mantling, Supporters and Motto—will usually be most appropriate, though the Badge may on occasion be thought more appropriate for a large scale but unimportant use. Conversely the full achievement may sometimes be wanted for a small scale but very important use, such as on a mayoral jewel. In this case it is essential that the rendering should be of the highest quality, so that no detail is lost.

In general, headquarter uses, and especially use by the head of the corporation, will rank highest, while outlying uses and those on the less dignified forms of property will rank lowest. The full achievement should grace the Council Chamber, but the badge will suffice for the corporation refuse bins. If there is no badge the crest alone may take its place. The great seal of the corporation should display the full achievement, but a small seal may bear the shield alone. Headquarter stationery of large size may similarly show the full achievement and smaller headquarter stationery the shield alone, while the badge may better befit stationery for minor and branch purposes. Whether the armorial hanging sign outside a minor branch of a bank should be similar in design, if not size, to the sign outside the Head Office raises questions both of bank policy and heraldic practice which should be discussed by the bank authorities with their heraldic adviser and so in many other cases.

Two kinds of armorial flag are relevant here, the banner of the arms and the badge flag. The banner of the arms does not, as is sometimes thought, display the full achievement. It takes the shield design only and adapts this to the form of the banner. Mediaeval banners were usually square, or, if rectangular, their height along the staff exceeded their breadth from staff to fly. These shapes were admirably adapted to heraldry. Modern practice, however, has tended towards a rectangular flag, whose breadth from staff to fly considerably exceeds its height along the staff. In some conditions of wind this may fly better, but it can distort some coats of arms in an unsatisfactory way. Careful thought should therefore be given to the design of the flag in relation both to the arms it has to show, the material it is to be made of and the place where it has to fly. The small flag on the official car can be made stiff, so that wind conditions are irrelevant and design should govern the proportions. The badge flag displays the badge on a plain or particoloured field and its form and design call for no less careful consideration.

The head of a corporate body, whether mayor, chairman of a council or company or head of a college, can by the rules of heraldry, if he has established a right to personal arms, bear these arms impaled with those of the corporation, during his term of office, as arms of office. With this impaled shield he should use his personal crest (if any), not that of the corporation. If the head of a corporation which is about to petition for a grant has not established his own right to arms, he may well think this the moment to do so.

Control by the Grantee

The right to a coat of arms conferred by a grant of arms, made by the Kings of Arms under the royal authority, is a limited right, defined by the limitations in the patent, and not a right which the grantee can pass on to a third party. A mere change of name in a corporate body does not affect it, but amalgamation or change of constitution may do so and in doubtful cases of this kind legal opinions have had to be taken. The only way in which a right to a coat of arms can be transferred to a body not entitled under the grant is by a Royal Licence (or equivalent provision of an Act of Parliament or Royal Charter) followed by exemplification by the Kings of Arms. Strict limits are naturally placed on the grant of this privilege.

A question often asked is whether a Local Authority can permit an approved body within its area to use its arms. If the body in question is not a distinct legal entity, but a section or organ of the authority itself, no difficulty arises. If, on the other hand, the body in question is a wholly separate entity such as the local cricket or rugby club, over which it has no control, then such body, if it wants arms and is qualified, should obtain a grant of arms to itself, and should in no case use those of the local authority.

Between these clearly defined extremes, however, there is a less clear middle area. For instance, can an authority permit a social or sports club of its employees to use its arms? The answer is that, while it cannot confer on the club any legal right to use the arms as its own, it can signify that it has no objection to the display of its arms or badge in defined ways in connection with the club activities as a mark of attachment to itself.

There is an interesting precedent and example here in the announcement made a good many years ago that the King had no objection to his subjects flying his own badge flag, the Union, as a mark of their loyalty on occasions of national rejoicing. One may think, perhaps, that what does not offend a monarch need not offend a local authority. There is, however, also, a relevant legal point here. In the Manchester case in the Court of Chivalry in 1955 the Surrogate, Lord Goddard, drew an important distinction between the use and the display of arms. Use means using them as if they were one's own—which, if they are not, is usurpation. But one can display the arms of another quite blamelessly by hanging up in one's house a picture of them bearing an inscription which shows clearly whose they are. Under this head perhaps come those souvenir mugs decorated with the arms of Cities and towns with descriptive words.
